On December 18, 1960, a debate on Cuba was televised over station KCOP, Channel 13, Los Angeles, California. The debate brought together TOM DUGGAN, commentator and both of whom were critical of the CASTRO regime in Cuba; and both in support of the CASTRO government.

b6
b7C

At the outset, introductions described as and a lecturer on Cuba and the Cuban revolution, who just returned from Cuba and would go back to Cuba in January 1961. was described as claimed at first that the Cuban revolution and FIDEL CASTRO are greatly "misunderstood" and suggested that the average American read "Listen Yankee", a report by C. WRIGHT MILLS in the language of the Cuban revolutionary, pointing out that the Cuban revolution has been misrepresented by ignorance and lies that Cuban resentment is based on real grievances. He explained that his own position is that Cuba must be viewed in the context of its past and future, and that we must "adjust" ourselves to the Cuban phenomena.

held, in which time occurred Shay's Rebellion and the Whiskey Rebellion and were passed the Alien and Sedition laws. When DUGGAN interposed that the CASTRO regime was not merely "revolutionary" but "Communist", [] complained that the whole affair was being "monopolized". The resultant confusion of voices terminated finally in a soothing commercial.

When the "debate" was resumed, [] continued his complaint, saying that "the doctor" had supposedly qualified himself by saying that he is Cuban. He then stated that he had just come back from Miami where two weeks ago there were 35,000 Cuban refugees. Then asking the questions who these refugees are, their motives and their background, he proceeded to name three persons of apparent wealth and connections with the former BATISTA regime and concluded: "These are a few of the men who are involved in these one hundred factions and forty organizations, who today pride themselves on being opposed to CASTRO." After disavowing that he, himself, had any "axe to grind", he charged that DUGGAN's conclusion was based on emotion, not reason, whereas his own was based on reason. He then turned toward [] and accused him of having an "axe to grind" and being, therefore, disqualified as one to speak on the matter. When DUGGAN defended [] as probably the one alone among the four of them who was actually qualified, being a Cuban, pointing out that [] is Mexican and inquiring if [] were not an Italian, judging from his name, [] replied that he is "an American".

[] returned the "debate" to its principal theme by asking how it was known that CASTRO is a Communist and contending it is only a conclusion and not fact. [] then cited CASTRO's own published constitution and laws as having not been put into effect. He argued that CASTRO's "agrarian reform" is actually "urban reform" which has resulted in government control over tenements and apartments and has deprived the people of their rightful ownership. [] asked what is more important, property rights or the welfare of the people, and proceeded to cite C. WRIGHT MILLS. To this [] merely commented, "fellow travelers". [] then suggested that "Communism" be defined, particularly Communism dominated by the Soviet Union. He contended that "Communism" under STALIN differed from "Communism" under KHRUSHCHEV and that "Communism" in the Soviet Union deffered from "Communism" in Yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, etc., that in each case "Communism" meant a different thing. To this confusion [] replied that Communism simply means the communization of property, the loss of private enterprise, the loss of freedoms of speech, press, education, and religion; and added that all these could be proven against the CASTRO regime. [] to this remarked that "MILLS disagrees with you" and said that what is happening actually in Cuba can be spoken of only by those who go down there, who have no "axe to grind". Against this standard, he unfavorably related [] whom he accused of having apparently been in "the clique that was in there" and of having "something" to lose.

[] then referred to the Cuban newspaper "Revolucion" and elicited from [] an admission that it is the Cuban government's "voice" and that newspapers in Cuba are controlled by the government "more or less", but [] asked "is that dictatorship?" [] persisted in regard to "Revolucion" that it is "the law", whereupon [] attempted to make clear a distinction between what appeared in print and what is put into effect. He said that the Cuban government is a "pragmatic" government, trying to solve Cuba's problems as it finds them. He said that it is attempting to fight two things but was interrupted by DUGGAN's prompting remark "the United States". [] then charged [] with shrouding himself in a cloak of patriotism by "screaming against Communism... something that has been worked to death in this country." He said "I am unalterably opposed to Communism", but "I am not equipped to call a man a Communist, as you obviously are." He read a quotation from "Che" GUEVARA, President of the National Bank of Cuba, to the effect that it is "naive" to think that men who fought for Cuban liberation did so only to kneel before any master, that "if the Soviet Union had just once demanded political independence as a condition for trade, our relations would have ceased at that moment. If we maintain increasingly cordial relations with all the Soviet bloc, it is because the word 'submission' has never arisen." The question was asked if the American press is impartial in view of its being controlled by "the dollar" and representing "big business" and in view of the "fact" one cannot say what one wants.

She enclosed a newspaper clipping concerning the writings of Mr. C. Wright Mills, a professor at Columbia University. This article is critical of Mills' writings and, particularly, of his support of Fidel Castro. Correspondent states that there is a great danger in libraries spreading communism as it is difficult to know the background of the books and the authors and she cites for examples Mr. Mills and his writings. Bufiles contain no identifiable data concerning the correspondent.

Bufiles reveal that Norman Cousins is Editor of "Saturday Review," a general magazine of information and opinion. Cousins has not been investigated by the Bureau; however, his name has often appeared as a member or sponsor for a number of organizations, many of which are of doubtful background. (62-90451)

Bufiles reveal that C. Wright Mills is a liberal professor at Columbia University. He has apparent pro-Soviet sympathies and has traveled in the USSR. In recent months Mills has written in support of Fidel Castro. (105-43902)

The following items of literature were sent to the correspondent:

1. "What You can do to Fight Communism and Preserve America."
2. "How to Beat Communism."
3. "Communist Illusion and Democratic Reality."
4. "America - Freedom's Champion."

Dear Mr. Hoover:

Re: Norman Cousins, editor of Saturday Review.

As [redacted], I had ordered this magazine and Mr. Cousins's book, Dr. Schweitzer of Lamboréné, and have cancelled both because local people are questioning Mr. Cousins's attitude toward communism. He spoke recently at the teachers' convention (Nebraska State Educational Association) at Norfolk, Nebraska. If he is a loyal American, I shall regret cancelling the order for his publications.

Can you give me information about him?

In libraries, there is great danger in spreading communism from the shelves, as we can't always know about books and authors such as the Mr. Mills written about in the clipping inclosed.

It is too bad that American people cannot look to the educators in our universities as leaders. As you can tell by the mid-west vote, Mr. Kennedy's association and choice of Harvard's Dr. Galbraith is a source of worry to many people.

Leftwing U.S. Prof Plumps for Fidel in Book

By Jules Dubois

Miami, Fla.

When Fidel Castro was in the Sierra Maestra one of the books he read, and carefully annotated, was "The Power Elite," by C. Wright Mills, a leftwing professor of sociology at Columbia University.

Castro showed the book to a friend and remarked: "If the American consul should visit me here I hide this book under the bed, no?"

That book by Mills, published in 1956, reached Castro in the mountains in November, 1958. It contained an indictment of the Eisenhower Administration, American corporations and businesses. Many of its opinions have been used without attribution by Castro since and again in his speeches and in his controlled press.

Last summer a representative of Castro's Fair Play for Cuba Front in New York arranged for Mills to visit Cuba as the guest of the bearded dictator. The result of that trip is a book, "Listen Yankee—The Revolution in Cuba," which is being published November 23 by McGraw-Hill and which is to be published simultaneously by Ballantine Books in a paper-bound issue.

Not-Too-Subtle

This book will be hailed in Havana, Moscow, and Peking as an accurate portrayal of the Cuban situation.

It is a not-too-subtle assist for the Communists and their fellow-traveling propagandists for the Castro-Red revolution. The book reads like translated tape recordings of Castro's interminable and repetitious paranoiac brainwashing tirades against the United States. And it is just as tiring and tedious.

The case for Cuba reported by Mills is replete with atrocious facts and figures.

tains to history and relations with the United States and with the wild gallop of Castro's race into the Communist Bloc and the destruction of the island's economy.

For Cuba

Mills states unequivocally and unashamedly that he is for the Cuban revolution, in doing so he just as unashamedly calls for the destruction of all United States and Latin American-owned businesses south of the border.

"Without the destruction of these interests—both Latin and North American—no real economic changes can reasonably be expected," Mills adds, "certainly not at a sufficiently rapid rate. And without such structural economic changes 'democracy' will remain what it now is in most of this continent: a farce, a fraud, a ceremony."

"And that is why I am for the Cuban revolution," he emphasizes.

The charges that United States corporations might have been influential in certain of the Latin American countries, namely the so-called banana republics of Central America, are outdated. This practice disappeared more than a quarter of a century ago but the Communists never let it die.

Mills underlines the leftwing bias that the only real democracy that exists is their type of Socialistic, state-controlled economy.

He praises Castro's agrarian reform and whoping success when it has proved to be a dismal failure, producing shortages of poultry, beef, eggs, beans, rice and other food stuffs.

He sides with Castro and blames the United States for pushing Cuba into the Communist Bloc.

per cent; commercial, 3 per cent; miscellaneous, 7 per cent; government, 5 per cent; and agriculture, at most 2 per cent.

The main change for these figures in 1972 will be the increase in transportation to 24 per cent and the decline of households to 17 per cent. Other sectors will use virtually the same percentage of energy.

In summary, the report believes that "the United States in 1973 could satisfy its demand for all energy from domestic sources of supply at no significant increase in costs."

He explained that his own position is that Cuba must be viewed in the context of its past and future, and that we must "adjust" ourselves to the Cuban phenomena.

[] who had been earlier described as a former Cuban national, a member of the American College of Surgeons, and president of the national Cuban refugee aid organization named "Society to Aid Cuba's Anti-Communists," stated that what is happening in Cuba is a "Communist invasion" hiding behind a "democratic" revolution, and pointed out that all those who had fought with CASTRO and took part in his first government, many of them true democrats, have turned because CASTRO's "Communist intentions" and lies have been exposed with the passage of time, and that the Cuban people now realize after one and one-half years that the principles of CASTRO's revolution have not been carried out.

[] said that one should not judge a man "guilty" until he has had a fair hearing, and charged that the American press has conducted a campaign of lies and villification against the CASTRO government, that the "true" picture of Cuba has never been presented by the press except in a few isolated instances.

DUGGAN then expressed his personal resentment of the villification of the American government by the CASTRO regime, which has blamed all of Cuba's ills on the United States. To this [] remarked that "all" are at fault, and that the conditions of Cuba today are due to Latin American dependence on an expanding American economy in this century. When [] asked what can justify CASTRO's depriving Cubans of freedom, rights and property, pointing out that private enterprise no longer exists, the worker has no right to strike and those who speak out against Communism have to leave their native land, [] replied that many others with "no axe to grind" disagree with him. [] and report that CASTRO is "extremely popular" and that the "rural peasants" are enjoying prosperity and have an outlook on life they never had before. The question, he said, is whom to believe: people who are against CASTRO, who lost their positions when CASTRO came into power, or those who favor CASTRO? The question is where veracity lies. The Cuban revolution, only two-years old, he argued, is hardly comparable [] asked what right had CASTRO, who promised freedom of the press, to take over the Cuban press, which condition certainly didn't constitute "freedom of the Press." [] agreed that it was not freedom of the press in Cuba "as we understand the freedom of the press here, but we must remember that Cuba is in the throes of a revolution; it is a government less than two years of age that is struggling for survival." He contended that whenever emergencies exist such as exist in Cuba, "rights that can be 'given' when society is normal have to be 'taken' away." She described him as a Specialist in photographing contemporary artists in their studios among their works. Last year he had an exhibition of American artists in the Metropolitan Museum. Now, he would like to go to the Soviet Union to photograph Russian artists. exchange offer. On page 2, under the caption "More Reactions to the April Invasion", this edition sets forth items from various publications which condemn United States involvement in the April 17, 1961, invasion of Cuba. Page 3 of this edition is devoted to defending the departure of ROBERT TABER from the United States on December 30, 1960, for Cuba and explaining that the $19,000 which TABER withdrew from the FPCC bank account prior to his departure was used to pay the Cuban Government for the tour to Cuba sponsored by the FPCC in December, 1960. ~~"90 Miles from Home"~~, a recently published book on Cuba by C. WRIGHT MILLS, is favorably reviewed on page 4 of this edition and the book is recommended by "Fair Play"

Along with this edition, [] furnished a one page mimeographed leaflet captioned "Fair Play Supplement", dated June 5, 1961, which enumerates various incidents throughout the United States which the FPCC considers harassment against the organization. It is pointed out that the FPCC intends to plan measures in order to defeat future harassment.

"Fair Play", Volume 2, Number 16, dated July 15, 1961, Received July 19, 1961

This issue contains a contemptuous report by EDWARD SHAW of his appearance before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee in Washington, D. C. on June 15 and 16, 1961. It also announces a new FPCC publication, ~~"Cuban Press Survey"~~, which contains "translations of articles from Cuban publications which provide factual information on the latest accomplishments of the Cuban revolution." Page 3 of this issue contains a reprint of "an appeal from writers, journalists and artists of Puerto Rico to the writers, journalists and artists of America", dated May 10, 1961, at San Juan, Puerto Rico. In essence, it is a criticism of statements made by President KENNEDY in his speech before the American Society of Newspaper Editors.

Also furnished by the confidential informant was a copy of a brochure advertising the new Liberty Book Club under the sponsorship of Prometheus Books, and containing a description of the first book offered, "The Power Elite." This description is as follows: "The Power Elite" is one example, in this case a searching and documented study by a leading American Sociologist into a little-known sector of American reality, the ruling class which orders and disorders our irrational society. Professor Mills' book has several of the qualities which we believe you will find in other Prometheus Books. It has solid scholarship; it brings fresh, specific, data; it has a sharp, trenchant critical outlook; it has the courage of the writer's convictions; and it deals with a suppressed aspect of American life." Concerning the Liberty Book Club the brochure says, "A new literary leap forward on the left." The distribution of the letter "To All Districts" is not known.
